

How Cybersecurity Fits into Your Compliance and Ethics Program

“Cybersecurity wasn’t necessarily a significant issue for in-house counsel 10-15 years ago. But now, companies have so many more obligations regarding information security and data privacy than they did even a decade ago,” writes Theodore F. Claypoole in The National Law Review.

“Initially, cybersecurity was an issue primarily for regulated companies. Then, companies with widespread consumer contact found themselves having to meet greater regulatory burdens. Today, though, cybersecurity is an issue for virtually every company, and it is important those efforts fit into a corporate compliance and ethics program.”

Read the article.