

In Apple iPhone Class Action, Plaintiffs Lawyers Defend $80 Mln Fee

"A national plaintiffs' firm on Wednesday asked a U.S. appeals court in California to uphold a nearly $80 million legal-fee award that was part of a $310 million settlement resolving class claims over the performance of certain Apple Inc iPhones. In the San Francisco-based 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals," reports Mike Scarcella in Reuters.

"Mark Molumphy of Cotchett, Pitre & McCarthy spurned objectors' allegations that the attorneys' fee award, which was 26% of the settlement, was too high, depriving the class of tens of millions of dollars, and other claims over the settlement notice process. U.S. District Judge Edward Davila in San Jose, California, held two days of hearings."
