

Jonathan L. Lewis Joins Lowenstein as Antitrust Partner in D.C. Office

Jonathan L. Lewis has joined Lowenstein Sandler as a partner in the firm's Antitrust & Trade Regulation practice group. He will be based in the firm's Washington, D.C., office.

Lewis is a seasoned antitrust and competition lawyer serving clients in diverse sectors, including manufacturing, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, health care, and technology. He advises clients regarding the management of their day-to-day business risks, counsels on corporate transactions, and provides litigation defense.

Known for providing substantive antitrust analysis of proposed transactions, Lewis provides counsel on a range of issues, including merger review and pre-merger integration planning, distribution and franchising, and other business practices. He also represents clients before federal and state antitrust enforcement authorities in the course of investigations concerning distribution practices and pre- and post-merger review.

Lewis received his J.D., cum laude, from University of Michigan Law School, and he holds both an M.P.M. (Master of Public Management) and a B.A. from the University of Maryland.
