Judge Gives Volkswagen a Month to Present Diesel Compliance Plan

Volkswagen has been given until March 24 to present an acceptable fix for bringing nearly 600,000 diesel cars into compliance with clean air laws, reports DW Akademie.

U.S. District Judge Charles Breyer told the car maker at a court hearing in San Francisco on Thursday that he has a "sense of urgency" about seeing a resolution.

The company has already admitted to using software that covers up the fact that some of their cars emit up to 40 times legally allowable emissions in vehicles sold since 2009.
