

Ken Starr's Next Role Will Be With The Lanier Law Firm

Bloomberg Law is reporting that Kenneth W. Starr, the former independent counsel, appeals court judge, and U.S. solicitor general, is going to be practicing law again.

Starr, the former Baylor University president, will join the Houston trial firm The Lanier Law Firm, which is involved in some of the country's biggest civil disputes, including over hip replacements and talcum powder, writes Elizabeth Olson.

"Starr already has been working with the Lanier firm's appellate litigation team on multi-million-dollar hip implant litigation against Johnson & Johnson and its subsidiary DePuy Orthopaedics Inc.," according to the report.
