

Las Vegas Shooting Settlement Faces Complex Process, Experts Say

Each of the thousands affected by the Las Vegas mass shooting ultimately will receive a share of a legal settlement announced last week, but experts caution that the shares will not be equal, according to a Las Vegas Review-Journal report.

The experts said the differences for the families of the 58 who died in the shooting will depend on factors such as the victim's level of income, how long that person was expected to live and how many children that person had, explains the Review-Journal's Rachel Crosby.

For the more than 800 injured in the attack, the calculation will be even more complicated. And an undetermined number of the 22,000 in attendance at the event suffered mental trauma.
