

Law Firm Sues Associate Who Quit After 1 Year

Above the Law reports on a law firm's breach-of-contract lawsuit against an associate who wants to leave the firm.

Senior editor Kathryn Rubino describes the suit filed by the Preis PLC law firm:

The firm recently sued Jane "Megan" Daily, a soon-to-be former associate leaving after a year at the firm. The petition alleges a breach of contract and damages – the firm says it lost $10,000 by training Daily for the year because "more experienced attorneys must take time away from other tasks to supervise and mentor new hires, further costing the firm significant lost billing time."
