

Music publishers sue Roblox in $200 million copyright infringement lawsuit

“The National Music Publishers’ Association has sued the popular gaming platform Roblox for copyright infringement on behalf of several music publishers in a lawsuit seeking $200 million in damages,” reports TORI B. POWELL in CBS News

“The Association alleges that Roblox “actively encourages” its players to utilize music from artists like Imagine Dragons, Ed Sheeran, Ariana Grande and others without paying appropriate licensing fees.”

Read the article.