

Managing Catastrophic Events: What to Expect With Incident Investigation Reports

Norton Rose Fulbright has posted an on-demand video from a recent webinar that discusses best responses for companies dealing with sudden catastrophic events.

Such events could be environmental disasters, explosions, violent criminal or terrorist acts or computer crimes, or catastrophic events, all generally difficult to predict, as is litigation that often follows the incident, the firm says on its website.

“While each crisis is unique, proper preparation can stabilize the situation and mitigate potential liability and damages,” the firm says. “A particular area of focus should be the preparation of an incident investigation report – when to prepare a report, who should prepare a report, how the report should be prepared and what may happen with the report in subsequent litigation.”
