New Survey Results: 264 Federal Judges Report on Litigation Practices

More than 250 active and recently retired federal judges responded to a recent Exterro survey on how they would like legal teams to manage litigation/e-discovery processes in their courtrooms.

Exterro has made the report available from its website.

An example of the type of information revealed is that that 47 percent of the judges have taken an action to remedy e-discovery problems three or more times in the past year.

The report covers such topics as:

- What judges expect of the attorneys appearing before them
- How often and why judges issue discovery warnings and sanctions
- What judges consider the most important e-discovery/litigation practices
