

Remote Biglaw Positions Separating Fact From Myth

“Besides the pandemic itself, perhaps no topic has dominated recent conversation among white-collar professionals like working from home. The upsides. The downsides. How long it will last. Whether the nature of work has changed forever. Everyone has an opinion and a preference,” reports Lateral Link in their Above The Law.

“For most of 2020 and early 2021, the remote work debate didn’t have much immediate practical implication. Like it or not, Biglaw attorneys were mainly working from home. But now that offices are reopening, lawyers face a choice either accept whatever new policy their firm is adopting or look to move to a firm that better aligns.”
