Republicans Put the Screws to Labor Board

The new Republican majority in the Senate is turning up the pressure on the National Labor Relations Board, with a series of hearings and legislative attacks against policies that make it easier for workers to unionize, reports The Hill.

The hearings will put a spotlight on an agency increasingly held in disdain by Republicans, while also offering a platform for the GOP to cozy up to the business groups that have assailed the labor board as blatantly pro-union. Atop the GOP's agenda is an effort to beat back regulations that would speed up the process by which employees vote to form a union, according to the report in The Hill.

Read the story.