

Rimon Represents 3D Systems in Sale of On Demand Manufacturing Business to Trilantic North America

3D Systems Sells On Demand Manufacturing Business to Trilantic North America

Rimon attorneys Olivia Lê Horovitz and Nicolas Simon are legal advisers to 3D Systems on the sale of the French ODM business to Quickparts

South Carolina based 3D Systems Inc. has sold its On-Demand Manufacturing business to leading private equity firm, Trilantic North America, for $82 million. 3D Systems' On-Demand Manufacturing business will be rebranded under Trilantic North America's ownership as Quickparts, and will offer a variety of advanced and rapid manufacturing services, including additive and subtractive capabilities. The sale allows 3D Systems to focus on its strategic purpose as the leader in enabling additive manufacturing solutions from applications in growing markets that demand high-reliability products.

Rimon's legal team led the French aspects of the sale of the ODM business from 3D Systems France to Quickparts France as part of this global transaction. The team was led by Rimon Paris Partner, Olivia Lê Horovitz, and supported by Rimon Paris attorney Nicolas Simon.

Olivia Lê Horovitz has previously advised 3D Systems Corporation on its acquisition of the same French business in 2008 from CEP and Protometal at the time owned by Ziad Abou which is now reacquiring the ODM business in partnership with Trilantic North America. She has also advised 3D Systems on the acquisition of technology start up, Co-Web, and metal laser printer manufacturer Phenix Systems by a mandatory public tender offer.

Read the 3D Systems Press Release here.