

Federal Courts Run Out of Cash Next Friday. Here's What Happens Then

News

During the shutdown, the system can spend money left over from fees and other sources to run through Jan. 11.

Trump Judicial Nominee Struggles to Answer Basic Legal Questions at Hearing

News

Matthew Spencer Petersen, who is up for a seat on the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, had to acquiesce on many occasions that his "background was not in litigation," CNN reports.

Alabama Senate Loss Will Rein in Trump's Judicial

Selections

Insight

With the Republicans Senate majority reduced to one, the opposition of two senators would leave Republicans without a majority to confirm judges, writes Jonathan R. Nash in The Hill.