

Tentative Opioid Settlement Reached in Ohio With Drug Companies

The nation's three top drug distributors and a major drugmaker reached a $260 million settlement with two Ohio counties Monday over the deadly havoc wreaked by opioids, striking a deal just hours before they were set to face a jury at the start of the first federal trial over the crisis, reports CBS News.

"The settlement means the closely watched trial will not move forward now," according to CBS News. "The trial involved only two counties – Cleveland's Cuyahoga County and Akron's Summit County – but was seen as an important test case that could gauge the strength of the opposing sides' arguments and prod them toward a nationwide settlement that ultimately would involve billions of dollars."
