

The 10 FBI Questions That Could End Clinton's White House Dreams

The FBI's upcoming interview of Hillary Clinton will be a turning point in the race for Democratic nominee, especially since Clinton won't be able to speak to FBI director James Comey and his agents in the same manner her campaign has communicated with the public, writes H.A. Goodman in the Huffington Post.

The questions could include: "Why didn't you know that intelligence could be retroactively classified?" and "Did President Obama or his staff express any reservations about your private server?"

Others could include: "How was your private server guarded against hacking attempts?" and "What was the political utility in owning a private server and never using a State.gov email address?"
