Theranos Walks Away From Zika Test

Elizabeth Holmes

Photo by Max Morse for TechCrunch

Fox Business is reporting that Theranos Inc. has withdrawn its request for emergency clearance of a Zika-virus blood test after federal regulators found that the company didn't include proper patient safeguards in a study of the new test.

"The move is another setback for the Palo Alto, Calif., company as it tries to recover from crippling regulatory sanctions that followed revelations by The Wall Street Journal of shortcomings in Theranos's technology and operations," Fox Business reports. "Theranos has said it is appealing."

Elizabeth Holmes, founder of the troubled company, recently announced development of a new blood-testing device that she said was designed for use outside a clinical laboratory and could run accurate tests from a few drops of blood.

Read the article.