

This Biglaw Firm Is Handing Out Up To $25K To Former Lawyers Who Refer New Associates

“They’re our best ambassadors. Many times when you do use vendors you have to teach them about your culture,” reports Staci Zaretsky in Above The Law.

“Geline Midouin, Shearman & Sterling’s chief people officer, speaking highly of the firm’s former lawyers, who are now being rewarded with cash for referring potential new hires. According to a report from Reuters, Shearman will pay $25,000 for a successful placement of associates or counsel with at least one year of experience, $2,500 for salaried business services professionals, and $1,000 for hourly staff,”

Read the article.