

TikTok to Pay $92M to Settle Class-Action Suit Over 'Theft' of Personal Data

"TikTok has agreed to pay $92 million to settle dozens of lawsuits alleging that the popular video-sharing app harvested personal data from users, including information using facial recognition technology, without consent and shared the data with third-parties, some of which were based in China," reports Bobby Allyn in NPR's Technology.

"The proposed settlement, which lawyers in the case have called among the largest privacy-related payouts in history, applies to 89 million TikTok users in the U.S. whose personal data was allegedly tracked and sold to advertisers in violation of state and federal law."

Read the article.