

University of Iowa Hires Husch Blackwell Lawyer as New General Counsel

“The University of Iowa is bringing back to campus a former deputy general counsel who for the last year has been advising colleges, including the UI, on issues like sexual misconduct policies and Title IX-related internal investigations to succeed Carroll Reasoner as vice president for legal affairs,” reports Vanessa Millers in The Gazette.

“James D. Jorgensen, who served as UI associate counsel and deputy general counsel from 2006 to 2018, will start as UI general counsel Sept. 30. He’ll earn an annual salary of $385,000. Having earned a bachelor’s degree in economics and political science from Iowa State University, a Juris Doctor from University of Michigan Law School.”

Read the article.