

Trump Won't Face Inciting a Riot Charges for North Carolina Rally

ABC News is reporting that Donald Trump and his campaign are not expected to face inciting a riot charges in connection with a violent incident at a rally in Fayetteville, NC.

The Cumberland County Sheriff's office had been investigating the real estate mogul and his campaign but decided "that the evidence does not meet the requisites of the law as established under the relevant North Carolina statute and case law to support a conviction of the crime of inciting a riot," the report says, quoting from a sheriff's department statement.

A man who attended the rally last week allegedly sucker-punched a protester in the face as he was being escorted out of the venue. John Franklin McGraw, 78, faces charges of assault and disorderly conduct.
