

U.S. Natural Gas Winter Outlook

✖ Platt's and Bentek Energy will present a free webinar on how the gas market looks, now that winter is on the horizon.

The event will be Thursday, Sept. 18, at 1 p.m. Eastern time.

Natural gas storage inventories this April were depleted to levels not seen for more than 10 years, leading to concerns about supply meeting demand, the sponsors say on their website. Ample production and lower gas demand from power generation have eased concerns about storage returning to normal levels.

Yet, with winter on the horizon, how does the market look moving forward? How will gas prices and pricing locations react to new pipeline capacity and demand sources moving forward?

New infrastructure, new forms of demand and record-levels of production all promise to make for an interesting narrative for the market over both the short and long term.
