

Warriors Front Office Hopes Minimum Contracts Turn into Maximum Production

“When offseason rumors include the possibility of trading for Bradley Beal, Pascal Siakam or Ben Simmons, signing three players to minimum contracts doesn’t create much fervor among a fan base. Warriors general manager Bob Myers totally gets it, but he also believes that the franchise,” reports Rusty Simmons in San Francisco Chronicle.

“Most people were looking at bigger things or hoping for bigger things, but we’re very happy with how the whole thing flushed out for us,” he said. “People don’t get super-excited about minimums, but they have to look at the players. At least, that’s how we view it. We really added some quality people and players. With little more than.”

Read the article.