White Paper: 4 Bet-the-Job Data Privacy Questions for Corporate Counsel

As the launch date approaches for the California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA) on Jan. 1, 2020, Exterro has published a white paper designed to help legal departments keep their organizations' privacy processes defensible, and minimize the risk of violating new privacy laws.

The white paper can be downloaded from Exterro's website at no charge.

The launch of the CCPA means that consumers have more information and control over a business's data practices, which creates challenges for businesses, mostly: Do they have their arms around their data? Do they understand where it lives within in their organization, and where it's shared?

The paper breaks down the key questions that arise in keeping an organization's privacy processes defensible, such as:

- The final "checklist" questions that you should be asking about your organization's data preparedness
- Tips for breaking down the elements of the CCPA into actionable processes
- Tips for maintaining a trim data inventory
