

Zoom Users could Qualify for $85 Million Class-Action Lawsuit Against Video Meeting Company over Privacy Concerns

“Zoom users in the United States could soon find themselves with a few extra dollars in their pockets, the product of a settlement the video meeting company has agreed to as part of class-action lawsuit. The $85 million lawsuit claimed that Zoom improperly shared users’ personal information and had,” reports Will Katcher in Mass Live

“People who purchased a Zoom subscription between March 30, 2016 and July 30, 2021 can file a claim for $25 or 15% of cost of the subscription, whichever is greater, Yahoo News said. Other people who used the free version of Zoom can receive up to $15. But as with other class-action lawsuits, the money will be divided between eligible.”

Read the article.